

Student Participation Program to the

25th International Council of Aeronautical Sciences 2006

Congress Centre Hamburg, Germany

September, 3rd - 8th 2006

The congress of the International Council of Aeronautical Sciences (ICAS 2006) is a platform for more than 1,500 guests to discuss aeronautical topics relating to scientific, industrial and political background. Being held in Germany again after an absence of many years, the free Hanseatic city of Hamburg is pleased to host this extraordinary event.

Concurrent with this international event on the topic of aviation, all interested and motivated students studying at a national university are invited to participate in the congress.

Use this unique chance to exchange your experience with other students and experts from all over the world and take an active part in one of the most important aeronautical events with an oral or poster presentation. Apply today for your individual sponsorship.

More information about the ICAS Students Participation Program, sponsored by the German Aerospace Center (DLR), and the detailed conditions of participation are available on www.icas2006.org
